Web development

Responsible for initiation, development and oversight of the Division of Historical Resources internet site (www.flheritage.com and dhr.dos.state.fl.us) through 2001. Supervised three web programmers and designers, approved all design and content, and directed growth of site. Site has grown to approximately 2500 separate pages concerning all aspects of archaeology, historic preservation, museum and folklife programs. The site has received several awards and continues to grow approximately 25% per year, currently receiving approximately 4 million visits annually.

RESPONSIBILITIES

Employees recruited, hired and supervised

When the Bureau was formed in 1983, no Ph.D. level professional had ever been employed in the Division's archaeological program. Resolving to raise the level of experience and expertise, I recruited and hired professionals with Ph.D. degrees to manage programs in historical archaeology, Spanish colonial history, underwater archaeology, prehistoric archaeology, preservation planning, conservation and collections management, and computerization.

Teaching and training

Although hundreds of government employees are directly responsible for management of cultural resources on the more than 1 million acres of public land in Florida, virtually none of these managers have training or experience in protecting and managing archaeological sites. The Bureau of Archaeological Research and the Florida Park Service developed a three-day training program to teach non-specialists the fundamentals of caring for sites. Since this program was initiated in 1996, more than 500 people have completed the training, and cultural resources have attained a high level of visibility and care in many Florida land-managing agencies and non-profit organizations.
